

GERMAN FIGHTERS FROM GUINEA HERE ON WAY-TO WAR

Seventy-three Colonists Who Bluffed English Into Granting Safe Conducts Arrive.

Strangest wards of all the world war to sift into New York were the ninety-seven German colonists, men women and children, from German New Guinea, away down in the water wilderness of the Antipodes, who arrived aboard the Southern Pacific steamer Anilles from New Orleans to-day.

Seventy-three of them are husky fighting men who have fought the English once, behind coral breastworks in New Guinea, and boast that they will fight the English again somewhere in the trenches of France. For, they say, they bluffed the commander of an Australian fighting ship into giving them safe conduct to Germany as the price of their surrender at Naulin, on their island possession, with no promise not to fight again exalted.

The seventy-three valiants, with Gov. Dr. Eduard Haber, their former chief in the island colony, expect to take the first Scandinavian-American Line steamer to Sweden, and so home and to the battle line.

Dr. Haber, the Governor of German New Guinea, came overland from San Francisco and arrived here a few days ago. But the rest of the colonists, swinging around by New Orleans and the sea route north, were slower to arrive.

A big Hamburg-American tug took them off the Antilles and across the North River to the Hamburg-American liner, President Lincoln, all bedecked in hunting in honor of the birthday of her name giver. There twenty-five of the refugees from Kiaochow who came last week still remained, and between China and New Guinea there was a love feast, toasted in brimming schooners.

The New Guinea strays will remain on the President Lincoln until they can take ship to Europe, the women going to Italy and the fighting men to Sweden.

Karl Hacker, a bronzed trader who has spent years skimming the South Seas for coya and pearls, told the story of the epic fight at Naulin.

"Our big wireless station was there," he said, "but even with the wireless we heard nothing of the war until Aug. 17. That night several of us had invitations to dine with John Slater, the only Englishman in the settlement. We went just the same, though the spark through the air said we were enemies."

"Next day we started making preparations for defense. We made trenches and got out all our ammunition, determined to save the wireless plant whatever happened."

"But we heard nothing from the English until Sept. 11, when an Australian battleship showed up and sent a landing party ashore. We gradually retired under fire to the last line of defense at the wireless station, but there we put up a big fight. There were only a little more than a hundred of us, but we burned enough powder for a regiment. The English were deceived. Finally they sent a flag of truce and asked for a parley."

"Our Governor said the only terms of surrender he would listen to were safe conduct for every fighting man back to Germany and no promise not to fight again. The English accepted these terms, and in Australia, where they took up, the Minister of State signed a special pass for every one of us. So we go back to fight."

"They tell us we will be the only German reservists to leave New York since the war began."

Chinese Rugs

Beautiful and Original

WE have purchased in bond a choice collection of Rugs made in China. A splendid opportunity to secure a Chinese Rug now so much in vogue, and at a price which is positively Lowest-in-the-City.

These Rugs are made exactly as they were centuries ago, of mountain sheep's wool, colored with vegetable dyes, and by such skilled workmen that the finished Rug is a true work of art.

Beautiful thoughts as well as beautiful color combinations are characteristic of Chinese Art, and all this is impressively expressed in our authentic collection.

The designs are mostly the graceful floral patterns, dragon flies and butterflies in rich colorings; others have medallion centrepieces.

An Interesting Event

On Saturday, February 13th, we will have a Demonstration of the new developing paper, made by Burke & James, which prints by artificial light.

The manufacturers claim REXO Paper to be superior to all other developing papers of this kind, having more latitude in exposure and development.

This demonstration will be conducted by experts sent direct from the factory in Chicago; and R. H. Macy & Co. is the first Store in New York City to have it.

A sample package of REXO Paper, containing six sheets size 3 1/4 x 5 1/2 will be given to each person attending the Demonstration. Bring your favorite negatives, and let us convince you of the superior quality of REXO Paper.
